FRANCE.—Napoleon has informed the officers of State of his approaching marriage. His speech is an able document. He says he conforms to the national wish and manners, but in the choice of a partner he casts away old political traditions. Royal alliances substitute family interest for national. This, besides, humiliates to go begging for wife. For seventy years past foreign princesses have ascended the French throne only to be unhappy, with the exception of Jo-ephine, and she was not of royal blood. He sneers at Austria jumping at an alli-ee with Napoleon 1st, and sarcastically alludes to the long chase of Louis Philippe's sons after wives, and instances the Dauphiness of Orleans as a Princess of third rate rank. For himself, he says he does not want any monarchial alliance, and frankly admits that he is a pereane, elected by a great nation. He is therefore determined to select a wife to please himself, and to be more free than any one wishing to purchase, at any price, the column of purchasers?

The lady is a Catholic. She will soon be presented to the people and the army, at Notre Dame.

There was a great sensation on the Bourse, and funds fell, but recovered.

The marriage takes place on the 20th.

Good for Greely!

Horace Greely of the New York Tribune, although fond of saw dust bread, and a believer in "Spiritual Knockings," and other humbugs, has some fun in him after all—Read the following:

WHO'S PRESIDENT?—We passed through a great deal of wear and tear in trying to make a President of Gen. Scott. We have a strong suspicion that we did not succeed; but the question has never yet been authoritatively decided. We rejoice that we are at least to know. Since the telegraph piteous that few like half-stones about our head, on the night of the 21 of November, we have known but little on the subject, for we never thought it worth while to wade the returns that came subsequently drifting through the newspapers. Indeed, we have studiously avoided the topic; and when anything has been said in our hearing about it, we have invariably done so with the greatest of care and precision, that the subject may not be entirely remedied. These are to be counted and declared on Wednesday next. We shall then know who is elected President to a very dead certainty. We rejoice that our suspense will be soon terminated.

He is elected President, but ask for Habemus, Warm Syrup and Liver Extract and others that men in their age are good for the American from Boston.
